The Shooting and Death of Joseph Addison. Dispatches from Burkeville yesterday announced the death of Mr. Joseph Addison, who was shot, in a duel in Lunenburg county, on Friday by Mr. Richard Garland. The difficulty originated in a quarrel between the two gentlemen, in which a young lady of the county was concerned.

On the morning of the 14th a brother-inlaw of Mr. Garland, Mr. Boswell, came to Mr. Wedderburn's and inquired for Mr. Addison. Upon seeing him, he told him that Mr. Garland was out in the public road nearwell to bring some friends to see fair play. Accordingly Mr. Addison repaired to the rendezvous, accompanied by Messrs. Eanes, Organ, and Jones. Upon arriving there they found Mr. Garland and Mr. Roache standing

Mr. Addison stepped in the road, and Mr. Garland advanced to meet him. When they were within a short distance of each other Garland raised his arm as if to strike, when Addison threw up his arm to ward off the blow. Garland then put his hand in his pocket and began to draw a pistol. Addison stepped back a pace or two remarking, "None of that." Garland still continuing to draw his pistol, Addison produced one and fired, the ball striking Garland in the left tiff arm just above the wrist, and breaking the bone. Garland then fired four shots in quick succession, only one ball taking effect. It entered two or three inches above Addison's right groin and lodged in the skin in the back. Addison's pistol refused to fire after the first shot, the remaining cartridges

When Garland had emptied his revolver he stepped up to Boswell (who was standing two or three paces off with a cocked revolver in his hand, which he had held pointing at Addison during the firing), and remarked "Give me another pistol." Boswell handed him the pistol, when Addison exclaimed, "That is foul play; my pistol will not fire and I have no other." Addison's friends got between the parties and said that they thought both should now be satisfied. Garland responded that he was, if the other parties were; and he and his friends withdrew. Addison's friends were unarmed, as they expected nothing but a fisticuff.
It seems that while Addison, who was engaged to the young lady in question was in Baltimore, Garland courted her, and told her Addison was flirting with her. This caused the lady to give Addison his conge, and in the mean time she engaged herself to

When Addison returned from Baltimore he went to see the lady for an explanation and told her Garland was only making fun of her, which caused her to become angry, and she wrote Garland an insulting letter and sent it to Addison to endorse and deliver, which he did, and told Garland he was responsible for the whole affair.

Garland, accompanied by several friends, went to see Addison for a settlement, and stopped three quarters of a mile from the House and sent Addison word he wished to see him, and to bring some of his friends but seeing Garland was bent on shooting bered. him drew a small revolver from his own pocket and fired once at Garland, the ball taking effect in his wrist, shattering it very badly. About the same time Garland began firing on Addison, the first shot taking effect in his groin.

Several other shots were fired, but none took effect.

The two were within a short distance of each other-about ten or twelve feet.

Addison died at six o'clock yesterday morning. Shortly after the encounter the local physicians probed the wound and found the ball in the skin about one inch from the hip. It entered the right groin and passed through the body. The wounded man was conscious up to within a very short time before he expired. He expressed perfect resignation at his approaching end. On Friday Garland was arrested, and was bailed, but an inquest was held, which resulted in the rearrest of Garland. The body of Addison, accompanied by his mother and other friends, passed through here this morning en route for the home of the deceased, in Baltimore.

Mr. Addison was from this city but had lived in Baltimore for some time and had been for several months past conducting a milling and lumber business in Lunenburg county. Previous to his venture in Virginia, Mr. Addison was engaged in the fertilizer business in Baltimore, and was connected with the Ceres Manufacturing Company. His father, Mr. A. E. Addison, died about a year ago. His mother, who was summoned from Baltimore as soon as he was wounded, was with him when he died.

A FALSE REPORT.—The report on the streets vesterday and last night that the steamer Jane Moseley, on her way up from Lower Cedar Point, had met with a serious accident and that many of her eight hundred passengers had been drowned, proved to be without the slightest foundation. MARVIN, THE BIGAMIST.-General Budlong A. Morton, alias Thomas Marvin, who is serving a term in the State prison for having a multiplicity of conjugal partners, has prepared a handsome set of drawings of a new building proposed to be crected at that institution for the female convicts. The plans have been submitted to the Board of Directors, but have not yet been adopted. The naughty old man is regarded as one of the best prisoners in the penitentiary, and makes himself useful about the prison in many ways. Although over sixty-five years, the old sinner is one of the most active convicts in the prison, and eats his full allowance of prison fare with relish and oftentimes calls for more. During all of his troubles his appetite has never failed him. Bad as he is, the General declares that he is not as hardened as he has been pictured He owns up to having married a dozen or more wives, but insists that he has been claimed as the husband of some unfortunate victims whom he never saw. It was said at one time that Marvin was industriously engaged in writing a history of his eventful career, which he intends to dispose of to a publisher. If such is the case the prison officials are not aware of it. His life has been a remarkable one, and if published would no doubt be of interest, at least to those fond of such literature. At present his duties to the Commonwealth forbid the prisoners, indulging in literary labors.— Richmond Cor. Norfolk Ledger.
